

Why Foster During the COVID-19 Pandemic?

In these uncertain times we are leaning on our community for support. By sending animals into foster homes we can make sure the volume of animals needing care in the shelter stays as low as possible. This allows us to practice social distancing at the shelter and keeps our high-risk staff and volunteers at home and healthy.

- 🐾 Fostering animals is especially critical right now, as we try to minimize staffing while we practice social distancing.
- 🐾 As a foster parent, you will have a much-needed distraction while the animal gets a break from the shelter. The animal will also benefit from undivided human attention, which is every companion animal's dream!
- 🐾 While you are staying at home, you have more time to bond with a new cat, train a new dog and spend time with some of our amazing animals. It's a win-win situation.
- 🐾 We learn invaluable information about an animal when they spend time in a home environment. We can then share this information with potential adopters to help us make good matches.
